What is the difference between virtualized and non-virtualized networks? A: Here is what the Wikipedia page for Virtualization technology has to say about it: Virtualization provides layer 2 abstraction by partitioning the physical network into multiple logical (virtual) networks. And here is the Wikipedia page for Network Virtualization: Network virtualization is the use of software (usually through the use of virtualization platforms, such as a hypervisor) to partition a physical network into multiple virtual networks. If you are using virtualization, the network is partitioned into separate networks. If you are not using virtualization, then the network remains in one logical network (i.e. all interfaces are on one physical network). The reason they provide this feature is that they allow greater flexibility: you can allocate
