Tacrolimus suppresses allergic immune responses in dog airway epithelial cells. The immunosuppressive drug tacrolimus has been successfully used in human for the treatment of bronchial asthma, a disease characterised by an inappropriate immune response to the airway mucosa. To investigate the effect of tacrolimus on epithelial cell cytokine release, canine epithelial cells (CCL39) were stimulated with allergens and subsequently treated with tacrolimus for up to 8 h. In the presence of an allergen, the levels of IL-13 and IL-5 were significantly lower in the cells that had been treated with 0.1 ng/ml tacrolimus for 8 h compared with untreated cells. The results of the present study suggest that tacrolimus may be a useful treatment for allergic airway disease. Oleanolic acid synergistically enhances the efficacy of SSRIs in a mouse model of depression. Depression is a major public health problem with a high incidence and prevalence. SSRIs are the first choice for treating this disorder. However, their clinical use is limited by the need to administer these drugs several times a day, which leads to poor compliance. Emerging evidence suggests that natural products possess antidepressant activity. In the present study, the effects of oleanolic acid (OA) alone or combined with paroxetine or escitalopram (SSRIs) in the mouse tail suspension test (TST), the forced swim test (FST), and the olfactory bulbectomy (OBX) model of depression were investigated. The results showed that OA (20 or 40mg/kg, p.o.) and paroxetine (10mg/kg, p.o.) but not escitalopram, significantly decreased immobility times in the TST. Additionally, the combination of Photorespiration in plants influences on soil microbes and nutrient cycling. The composition of plant roots and roots-associated bacteria are key determinants of rhizosphere functioning. The significance of these properties on soil microbes could be strongly affected by naturally occurring photorespiration. Here, we tested the influence of photorespiration on rhizosphere functioning of a leguminous and a non-leguminous plant as well as on the composition and activity of rhizosphere soil microbes. To check for the activity of photorespiratory enzymes, the capacity of 2,6-dichlorophenol-indophenol (DCPIP) reduction, the assessment of photorespiration by continuous burst frequency, the $(^{14}\text{C})\text{-CO}_2$ fixation and the accompanying CO_2 emission on $(^{14}\text{C})\text{-CO}_2$ could be determined. Bacterial composition of rhizosphere soil was studied by phospholipid fatty acid (PLFA) analysis. Under laboratory conditions micro- and nano-surfactants (SLM) resulted in a strong reduction of rhizosphere-related microbial biomass. In contrast, 2.5% DCPIP caused an accumulation of rhizosphere microbes. The analysis of rhizosphere soil showed a higher abundance of non-rhizosphere-associated indicator bacteria. On the contrary, an increased presence of vervetibactin-

Mediation of the enantioselective disposition of the (+)-isomer of ABT-530 in rat. ABT-530 is a novel, potent, orally active, and long-acting octahydrobenzo[1,4]dioxino[4,3-c]isoquinoline derivative possessing cardio- and renoprotective activity. The major metabolite in rat and human plasma is the (-)-enantiomer of ABT-530. The (-)-enantiomer is rapidly excreted, with a terminal elimination half-life of approximately 1.5 h. The systemic bioavailability of the (-)-enantiomer in rats after oral dosing ranges from 31 to 60%, with approximately 80% of the oral dose recovered as the (-)-enantiomer in the feces. The enantiomeric ratio of the systemic exposure to the (-)-enantiomer was approximately 3.5. A significant decrease in the enantiomeric ratio was observed after pretreatment with a cytochrome P450 (CYP) 3A inhibitor. The objective of this study was to determine the metabolic liability of the (+)-enantiomer in rat and to assess whether a stereoselective disposition was a contributing factor in the formation of the (-)-enantiomer. The rate of formation of the (-)-enantiomer of ABT-530 was similar (approximately 14 pmol/microM/min) for both enantiomers (approximately 7% of the formation rate of the (-)-enantiomer of ABT-530). The formation of the (-)-enantiomer was linearly related to the oral dose, with an average formation rate of 9.3 +/- 2.4 pmol/microM/min (mean +/- SD), based on oral doses of 10, 30, and 60 mg/kg. The enantiomeric ratio of the oral exposure to the (-)-enantiomer did not increase with increasing oral doses (enantiomeric ratio, 2.30, 2.26, and 2.13 at 10, 30, and 60 mg/kg, respectively). A relationship was not demonstrated between the oral clearance of the (-)-enantiomer and its enantiomeric ratio after oral doses of 10, 30, and 60 mg/kg. It was concluded that the metabolism of the (+)-enantiomer did not contribute
