Uncategorized The big question often asked is if I could have potentially missed a nutrient that might be essential to the gut and/or immune system health? The answer is no. Unfortunately very little has been studied in Canada. We do have some European studies about these ingredients and the evidence is growing. Another plus is that we can actually use all of these ingredients in a multivitamin formula. Vitamin B12 Vitamin B12 is vital for promoting healthy red blood cells, blood-producing cells that carry oxygen and nutrients throughout the body.1 It is also needed to stimulate the growth and development of nerve cells and to aid in the production of antibodies that fight infections.2 Vitamin B12 is found in fish, meat, dairy and cereals. It is also found naturally in some plant foods such as turnips, beetroot, avocados and mustard. The amount in food varies widely, with some foods having as much as 30 times more than others.3 In most cases, the RDI is the optimum level of vitamin B12 for daily use. People with deficiencies should generally take a daily oral vitamin B12 supplement, which they should be able to purchase without a prescription.4 Vitamin B12 has no known toxicity risk. Large amounts of vitamin B12 in food or as a supplement do not increase the risk of developing vitamin B12 deficiency, for which the recommended daily intake is 2 mcg a day for all adults.5 However, vitamin B12 may have benefits when taken in smaller amounts. Vitamin B12 can be difficult to absorb from food.6 Some individuals who take B12 supplements also get better absorption when they take B12 with meals.⁷ If you take a vitamin B12 supplement daily, it is best to take it with meals to ensure maximum absorption.⁸ Other Uses of Vitamin B12 Vitamin B12 is essential to the production of DNA
