Release: Mar 20, 2017. I then received the letter telling me that I had received my job placement". The present invention relates to an optical system which forms a beam of light with a small spot diameter onto a photo-sensor and controls the spot diameter of the formed beam of light so that it is maintained small. A method, using two objective lenses, that enlarges or reduces the spot diameter of a beam of light using a change in the magnification of each of the objective lenses on movement of a movable optical element, is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,725,844. This method makes the focal length of the two lenses different. However, a focal length difference between the two lenses should be made as small as possible to make the formed beam of light converge toward a spot position, and in view of the operational characteristics of the objective lenses, it is difficult to make this difference large. Therefore, the formed spot diameter is large and an optical system which can form a beam of light with a small spot diameter onto a photo-sensor is desired. The Japanese Tokkai Sho 61-218468 (1990) published by the Japanese Patent Office discloses an optical system which includes two objective lenses and which forms a beam of light with a small spot diameter onto a photo-sensor, in which a wedge-shaped surface is formed in the surface of one of the objective lenses and the other objective lens is located relative to the objective lens having the wedge-shaped surface. With this method, the reflection angle of light incident on the wedge-shaped surface is in a certain range and the reflectance is considerably high. Therefore, a beam of light is reflected onto the wedge-shaped surface of the objective lens and is reflected in only one direction toward the photo-s
