Joel Bergman Joel Bergman is an American politician who served on the Santa Cruz City Council and was the vice mayor of Santa Cruz, California. He is currently the director of the Economic Development Institute of Santa Cruz County, a non-partisan business and economic think tank. Personal life Bergman is a native of Wisconsin. He graduated from the University of Wisconsin-Madison, with a bachelor of science degree in economics. He has lived in Santa Cruz since the 1980s. Bergman has been married to his wife Janine since 1992. They have four children and live in the city's downtown neighborhood. Political career City Council Bergman was elected to the Santa Cruz City Council in 2003 to serve a 4-year term on the council. Bergman has remained on council since. In 2007, he was elected to a second term to the city council. He was reelected to the city council in a nonpartisan election held in 2009. As a city councilmember, Bergman has been an active advocate for economic development in Santa Cruz. He was one of the city's "poster children" in an advertising campaign to attract high-tech businesses to the city and was a key player in the Baylands lands debate that resulted in the creation of the Baylands Business Park. Vice Mayor Bergman was elected to the position of vice mayor of Santa Cruz on November 8, 2010. He was first elected to serve in this capacity in a special election held in 2010. He was to serve as a heartbeat of the city council, much like the city council president serves as a heartbeat of the council. Prior to his election, the vice mayor in Santa Cruz was known as the "Robin Hood" of the city government since he would take money from the city's coffers to pay for special projects in the city. Bergman ran unopposed in the 2010
